Market Review

Financial markets suffered a broad sell-off in October as the overhang from the US-China trade standoff, geopolitics and a hawkish Federal Reserve continued to weigh on investor sentiment; Asian equities ended the turbulent month in negative territory. Volatility continued to grip markets, given rising concerns over corporate profits and the longevity of global economic growth amid rising borrowing costs. Meanwhile, a spike in global yields and a surging US dollar, coupled with soft China macro data and liquidity, soured investment sentiment further. Towards the end of the month, there was a slight relief rally in Asia, thanks to gains eked out by US equities.

Turning to central bank action, policymakers delivered mixed decisions in October. The Monetary Authority of Singapore (MAS) tightened monetary policy as it allowed a slight increase in the slope of the SGD NEER policy band but kept the band width and level at which it was centred unchanged. Bank Indonesia (BI) kept its benchmark rate unchanged at 5.75%, and reiterated its commitment to contain the current account deficit. India and Korea similarly left interest rates steady. The Reserve Bank of India took the decision on the back of expectations for inflation to remain contained, as did the Bank of Korea (BOK), which left its inflation estimate for 2018 unchanged despite an unexpectedly high September inflation print. This said, the BOK cut its 2018 growth estimate from 2.9% to 2.7%.

Against the above, the People's Bank of China (PBOC) relaxed monetary policy and indicated an accommodative stance going forward, following a decision to cut the reserve requirement ratio (RRR) for the fourth time this year in a bid to encourage lending. The latest cut will release RMB1.2 trillion in liquidity, of which RMB450 billion will be used to repay maturing medium-term lending facility (MLF) loans.

Investment Strategy

Asia equity markets remain difficult, as investors grapple with slowing earnings growth, increased market volatility and tightening liquidity in the region. Asian growth, although remaining somewhat resilient, has seen its outlook weaken on the back of the potential for increasing trade tariffs between the US and China. Our base case is for trade tensions to be protracted. As global economic growth continues to moderate, we expect policymakers to become less hawkish and more pro-growth in the coming quarters. Current elevated market volatility regime is likely to persist into year end.

With valuations improving given the recent stock market correction, we have started to focus on stocks that would perform well in 2019. To this end, we have positioned our portfolios accordingly, focusing on dividend growth stocks with better earnings visibility as well as those with improving outlook for next year. It remains sensible adhering to our fundamentally driven approach to bottom-up investing, with minimal deviation from the longer term, structural themes driving Asia's growth.
